The controls that prevent most real incidents, and how to get them actually implemented.

The majority of successful attacks exploit a small number of well understood weaknesses. This programme concentrates on those: identity, patching, backup, segmentation and the human routes in. It is aimed at getting fundamentals genuinely in place rather than at breadth of coverage.

Available as classroom, live online, in house, hybrid.

Who it is for

IT staff, managers with security responsibility, and those new to a security role.

What you will be able to do

- Identify the small set of controls that prevent the majority of incidents.
- Assess the organisation's current position against those controls.
- Prioritise remediation by risk reduction per unit of effort.
- Explain security risk to a non technical decision maker.

The outline

DAY 1

How incidents actually start

Credential compromise · Unpatched exposure · Phishing and the human route · Third party access

DAY 2

The controls that matter

Identity and multi factor authentication · Patching and asset inventory · Backup that has been tested · Segmentation and least privilege

DAY 3

Getting it done

Prioritising by risk reduction · Making the case for spend · Measuring control effectiveness · Preparing for an incident

What you leave with

- A control baseline assessment.
- A prioritised remediation plan.
- A backup and recovery test schedule.
- A risk briefing written for an executive audience.
