Build a safety management system that changes what happens on site rather than what is recorded.

A safety system that produces paperwork without changing behaviour is a liability. This programme covers hazard identification, risk assessment, control selection and the supervision that determines whether controls are actually used, with emphasis on the gap between the documented method and the work as actually done.

Available as classroom, in house.

Who it is for

Safety officers, supervisors, and managers accountable for safety performance on operational sites.

What you will be able to do

- Identify hazards including those normalised by long exposure.
- Assess risk in a way that discriminates between real levels of exposure.
- Select controls in hierarchy order rather than defaulting to protective equipment.
- Close the gap between the documented method and the work as done.

The outline

Taught across 5 days. The sections below are the curriculum rather than a day by day timetable.

SECTION 1

Hazard and risk

Identifying normalised hazards · Risk assessment that discriminates · Dynamic assessment · Involving the people doing the work

SECTION 2

Controls

The hierarchy and why it is ordered that way · Why protective equipment is the last resort · Verifying a control is in use · Permit systems

SECTION 3

Work as done

The gap between method and practice · Why people deviate · Supervision that detects drift · Learning from near miss

What you leave with

- A hazard identification method for the delegate's own site.
- A risk assessment that discriminates rather than rating everything medium.
- A control selection record following the hierarchy.
- A supervision approach that detects drift from method.
